MODULE 9: MISSION AND ORGANIZATIONAL VALUES

Overview of Content

In this module, you will:

- Review information about inclusiveness in relation to mission and organizational values.
- Analyze the data from the information-gathering process that pertain to mission and organizational values.
- Review a series of concrete suggestions for developing more inclusive mission and organizational values statements.
- Make recommendations about whether or not changes need to be made in relation to the mission and values.
- Establish goals and objectives for your work on mission and values statements that will be integrated into your inclusiveness blueprint.

Note that in most cases, you will not actually revise the mission or values statements; rather, you will gather and analyze important information about mission and values and make a recommendation (most likely to the board of directors and CEO) about the need for changes to the mission and values statements and a process for making those changes.

This module should be completed by any organization that has decided to look at its mission and organizational values in relation to inclusiveness. If you haven't prioritized mission and organizational values as a part of your inclusiveness initiative, then skip to Module 10: Board of Directors.

Who to Involve

The work in this module should be completed by the Inclusiveness Committee as a whole.

MODULE 9: MISSION AND ORGANIZATIONAL VALUES

Organizational Mission Statements

The purpose of a nonprofit mission statement is to make clear an organization's core purpose, the general methods it uses to achieve its overall goals, and the primary community that it serves.

Many inclusive organizations strive to address their commitment to inclusiveness in their mission statements as well as through other mechanisms such as an inclusiveness statement. However, some organizations find that inclusiveness is best addressed through means other than a mission statement.

For example, the mission of a fictional animal welfare organization is to “provide shelter and care for animals in need.” In this case, because the mission is narrowly defined to focus on animal welfare, it might not be appropriate to address issues of inclusiveness within the organization's mission.

Depending in part on the outcomes from your information gathering, in Exercise 9-C: Deciding What to Include in the Blueprint, you will have the opportunity to consider whether or not your organization needs a mission statement change to fully address issues of inclusiveness.

Here are some examples of mission statements that have been designed to include a commitment to inclusiveness:

- 1. The Chinook Fund: The Chinook Fund is committed to the transformation of society into one that promotes social justice and freedom from oppression, including but not limited to, racism, sexism, classism, heterosexism, ageism, and ableism.<sup>1</sup>
- 2. National Committee for Responsive Philanthropy: NCRP is an independent nonprofit that works to strengthen the nonprofit sector and improve its ability to represent and serve individuals politically, economically, or socially disadvantaged, by promoting greater philanthropic openness and accountability.<sup>2</sup>
- 3. Denver School of Science and Technology: The Denver School of Science and Technology is dedicated to providing a diverse student body with an outstanding liberal arts high school education with a science and technology focus. By creating a powerful learning community centered on core values and a shared commitment to academic excellence, DSST will increase the number of underrepresented students (women, minorities and economically disadvantaged) who attain college science and liberal arts degrees. DSST graduates will be responsible, engaged citizens who are prepared to be leaders of the future.<sup>3</sup>

“Each time a man stands up for an ideal, or acts to improve the lot of others, or strikes out against injustice, he sends forth a tiny ripple of hope...those ripples build a current that can sweep down the mightiest walls of oppression and resistance.”

-Robert F. Kennedy

Organizational Values Statements

Values statements spell out the core principles that guide an organization’s work. Whether or not they are officially stated, an organization’s values are an important part of the organization’s culture. Values statements help define the principles and ethics by which an organization operates and can act as a guide. They help define what is right and wrong as well as the behaviors and perspectives that are valued within the organization. They are often called upon to help resolve conflicts or to negotiate ethical dilemmas. Community members also can look to these statements to find out more about an organization. Not all organizations have values statements, but all organizations have values.

If your organization does not have or does not want to have a values statement at this time, then only complete the portions of this module that relate to mission statements.

However, if your organization does have a values statement, then it is probably worthwhile to re-examine it as a part of your inclusiveness initiative. Likewise, if your organization does not currently have a values statement but would like to develop one, continue with the exercises in this workbook regarding values.

Many organizational values include a statement of commitment to diversity or inclusiveness. An obvious statement would be “We value diversity.” Without a further description of what “valuing diversity” means, it may be hard for people to link this statement with their work. Because inclusiveness is about treating people with respect, and because good management and leadership practices are related to successful inclusiveness practices, oftentimes values statements that do not directly relate to inclusiveness can be useful in creating a more inclusive organizational culture. For instance, such values as “We will treat each other fairly” and “We will value the opinions of others” don’t directly mention inclusiveness, but they can promote the development of an inclusive organization.

Of course, just because an organization says it has a certain set of values does not mean that those values are a part of the day-to-day practices of the organization. However, even values that your organization aspires to are worthy because they can provide people with opportunities to raise concerns about how an organization says it wants to behave and how it actually behaves. This conflict between aspirations and reality can be especially common with values relating to inclusiveness. So long as there is buy-in at all levels when the values statement is created, statements about inclusiveness are worth including because they will help create internal understanding about the desired shift within the organizational culture.

Here are some examples of components of values statements from nonprofit organizations that relate directly or indirectly to inclusiveness or diversity:

1. Commitment to equitable treatment and elimination of discrimination in all its forms at all organizational levels and throughout all programs.<sup>4</sup>
2. Commitment to diversity in all staff, volunteers, and audiences, including full participation in programs, policy formulation, and decision-making.<sup>5</sup>
3. Recognition of the rights of all individuals to mutual respect; acceptance of others without biases based on differences of any kind.<sup>6</sup>
4. Ability to lead and model diversity throughout the organization and to lead society toward pluralism.<sup>7</sup>
5. Commitment to individual and organizational efforts to build respect, dignity, fairness, caring, equality, and self-esteem.<sup>8</sup>
6. Diversity – Embrace cross-cultural diversity – Adaptable, anti-racist, embracing cultural differences, open to new experiences.<sup>9</sup>
7. Respect and value diverse life challenges, creating an environment that is inclusive of all.<sup>10</sup>
8. Welcome and respect the diversity of our patients, employees, and physicians.<sup>11</sup>
9. We acknowledge and honor the fundamental value and dignity of all individuals. We pledge ourselves to creating and maintaining an environment that respects diverse traditions, heritages, and experiences.<sup>12</sup>

These statements represent only a small sample of the many possible ways that values statements can embody an organization's commitment to inclusiveness.
